Introduction

New to this edition

There are substantial revisions and updated materials throughout the 10th edition.

1. The text has been reorganized into 17 chapters.
2. Each chapter ends with case studies.
3. Chapter 2 on families includes a look at the diverse populations of the twenty-first century.
4. Chapter 3 on child development includes material about the developing brain.
5. This thread of neuroscience continues throughout the text as the chapters discuss how the brain is affected by each particular form of child maltreatment.
6. Chapter 8 looks more closely at child sex trafficking.
7. Chapter 10 now covers the full range of intervention, from reporting through case management.
8. The old Chapter 10 has been separated into two chapters—Chapters 10 and 11—so that more attention could be given in Chapter 11 to the role of other professionals.
9. The functions of initial intervention and case management are more clearly defined.
10. The day in the life of a child protection worker in Chapter 17 has been rewritten by a protective services supervisor working in child protection to reflect today's practices.
11. The references have been moved to the end of each chapter for easier access.
12. Learning objectives are provided in each chapter to guide the student in reading the material.

A separate set of PowerPoint Slides have been created to accompany this text. To access these slides, please visit: <http://www.pearsonhighered.com>. You will need to register with Pearson's Instructor Resource Center.

Using the Instructors Manual

This manual provides the instructors with useful instructional guidelines for each chapter to enhance teaching effectiveness.

Overview

This section gives a brief synopsis of the chapter. The content overviews can facilitate the organization of the course syllabus as well as weekly planning.

Objectives

Student learning outcomes are clearly specified in each chapter. Instructors may use these as a guide for assessment of student success.

Key Words/Phrases

There are certain terms or phrases that will be important for the future practitioner to master. These may be jargons used in the field, or just important words with which the student should become familiar.

Key Points for Students to Learn

By focusing on a handful of important points in the chapter, the instructor can help the students master the necessary concepts.

References

A short list of references is provided for instructors to have easy access to firsthand reading of the relevant articles.

Essay/Discussion Questions

Several questions are provided to be used in either essay exams or to stimulate class discussions.

Multiple Choice Exam Questions

A set of questions is included for each chapter that should lessen the burden on the instructor when it comes to creating tests. These questions provide a tool to determine if the students have mastered the material that was presented in the readings and class discussions.

Chapter 1

The Maltreatment of Children Then and Now

Overview

This chapter examines the history of child maltreatment and the services for abused and neglected children. Such topics as dependence, discipline and child labor are discussed. Early sexual attitudes are traced to the present.

The chapter also looks at the recent history of helping abused and neglected children, from the writings of such reformers as Dickens, to the formation of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, and later, the efforts of C. Henry Kempe.

In addition, the chapter discusses the influence of neurobiology on the understanding of trauma and the current state of child protection today and the need for further research.

Objectives

After reading this chapter, students should be able to:

- Discuss how children were viewed prior to the twenty-first century, including their dependent status, how they were disciplined, and how they were sexually exploited.
- Explain how children were used as part of the labor force and what efforts were made to change these practices.
- Outline the early efforts to protect abused and neglected children.
- Describe how the study of trauma influences the current view of child maltreatment and child protection
- Describe the role of protective services today.

Key Points for Students to Learn

A. Early Views of Children

1. As property: infanticides in ancient world & farm labor in feudal societies. Initially children were the property of their parents who could decide their life, death, or discipline.
2. Matters of discipline: corporal punishment
3. Sexual exploitation: Female children were often bartered and abused in convents, while pederasty for boys were a common practice.
4. Contradictions in Victoria era with strict moral codes but rampant pornography
5. Child Labor during industrial revolution and slavery in the southern states. Indenture was a popular form of child labor in the early United States. Indenture also provided an opportunity for children to be abused.

B. Growing Concerns and Awareness

1. Settlement Houses (late 1880's) provided refuge from child labor, for white children
2. African American children were neglected by child welfare system

3. Native American children were removed from home and sent to boarding schools to assimilate them into the White culture.
- C. Early Attempts to protect children
1. A British writer Dickens wrote an autobiographical book Oliver Twist and brought the issue of child abuse to public attention.
 2. The case of Mary Ellen, the first child removed from her homes due to abuse, gave rise to a myriad of reforms, such formation of Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children (SPCC) in 1875 and The Child Welfare League of American in 1920.
 3. The coining of the term “the battered Child Syndrome” by C. Henry Kempe was a result of the discoveries of abuse made by Caffey and his colleagues when they noticed unexplained breaks on x-rays. The use of this term furthered both research and treatment efforts.
- D. Further Developments
1. Several pieces of federal legislation have had an impact on intervention with abused and neglected children. The Child Abuse Prevention Act (1974), The Indian Child Welfare Act (1978) and Family Preservation and Support Services Act (1993).
 2. Emerging theoretical influences include Adverse Childhood Experiences Study and Psychological Trauma Theory. Studies have found significant correlation between child abuse and household dysfunctions.
- E. The Role of Child Protection Services
1. CPS has become more involved in solidifying risk assessment criteria, advocating for child protection teams, and offering more family centered services, following the model of Family Rehabilitation.

Essay/Discussion Questions

1. What was the fate of children prior to the late nineteenth century? On what attitudes was this based?
2. Who was Mary Ellen and what influence did she have on the history of intervention on behalf of abuse children?
3. Why did it take one hundred years between the case of Mary Ellen, which greatly influenced the intervention in child maltreatment, until laws were passed on a national level to protect children from abuse and neglect?
4. Trace the more recent events in the history of intervening on behalf of abuse and neglected children.
5. Jane Addams is a fascinating individual in the history of the Settlement house movement and Hull House provided many of the leaders of child welfare reform. What might be a similar movement in today’s world?
