Essay

170. Define management and describe two important ideas expressed in the definition.

ANSWER: Management is defined as the attainment of organizational goals in an effective and efficient manner through the planning, organizing, leading, and controlling of organizational resources. The two important ideas expressed include the four functions of management and the attainment of organizational goals in an effective and efficient manner.

171. Describe the four management functions.

ANSWER: Planning means defining goals for future organizational performance and deciding on the tasks and use of resources needed to attain them. Organizing involves assigning tasks, grouping tasks into departments, delegating authority, and allocating resources across the organization. Leading is the use of influence to motivate employees to attain organizational goals. Controlling means monitoring employees' activities, determining whether the organization is moving toward its goals, and making corrections as necessary.

172. Describe the skills necessary for performing a manager's job.

ANSWER: The skills are conceptual, human, and technical. Conceptual skills include the cognitive ability to see the organization as a whole system and the relationships among its parts. Human skills are demonstrated in the way that a manager relates to other people. Technical skills include mastery of the methods, techniques, and equipment involved in specific functions.

173. Why are conceptual skills most important for top managers?

ANSWER: Top managers are often the keys to holding the whole company together. In order to accomplish this, top managers must be able to see the "big picture," i.e., perceive the critical situational issues as well as the relationships between all organizational parts.

174. Briefly discuss the relationship between management skills and management level.

ANSWER: Conceptual and human skills become more important as a manager moves up through the organization, and technical skills become less important as a manager moves up through the organization.

175. What are technical skills? At what level are they most important and why?

ANSWER: Technical skill is the understanding of and proficiency in the performance of specific tasks. Technical skills also include specialized knowledge, analytical ability, and the competent use of tools and techniques to solve problems in that specific discipline. Many managers get promoted to their first management job by having excellent technical skills. Technical skills are particularly important at lower organizational levels, but they become less important than human and conceptual skills as managers move up the hierarchy.

176. Describe the three categories of managerial roles.

Name: _____ Class: _____ Date: _____

Chapter 01: Leading Edge Management

ANSWER: The three categories of managerial roles are informational, interpersonal, and decisional. Informational roles describe the activities used to maintain and develop an information network. Interpersonal roles pertain to relationships with others and are related to human skills. Decisional skills relate to those events about which the manager must make a choice and take action.

177. How do small business managers emphasize different management roles in comparison to larger business managers?

ANSWER: Manager of small businesses often see their most important role as that of spokesperson. The entrepreneur role is also more important. Small business managers tend to rate the leader and information processing roles lower than managers in larger organizations.

178. Identify and explain the change that has affected organizations and management the most.

ANSWER: Technology has affected organizations and management because of the explosion of its usages. The use of computers and the Internet, as well as wireless technology and digital networking has grown to astonishing numbers, and organizations and management must keep up with the growth in order to keep a profitable business.

179. The process of management in the workplace is changing. In the past, a manager's task was to achieve organizational goals by maintaining tight control over their employees while standardizing procedures to maintain stability. Today's managers are asked to empower employees while encouraging collaboration and innovation. Contrast today's workforce with the workforce of the past. What developments in present society necessitate a shift in management style? Can you foresee other management style changes on the horizon?

ANSWER: Student answers will vary. People in today's society want to feel like they are making a valuable contribution in the workplace; they are much less likely to relinquish "control" to their manager. They often demand more flexibility and creativity in their work situation because their lives are fast paced, unpredictable, and increasingly mobile. Today's managers have to accomplish more with fewer resources. They recognize the value of being an enabler rather than a controller, using an empowering leadership style, and enlisting the cooperation of willing workers who are part of a team. Improved communication techniques, use of social media, and the increase in off-site workers will surely force even more changes related to management style in the future.

180. Effective managers must possess technical skills, human skills, and conceptual skills in varying degrees. After defining each term, justify your assessment of which of the three skills you deem to be most important to a successful manager.

ANSWER: Student answers will vary. Technical – understands and is proficient in the performance of tasks (knowledge and use of tools and techniques, as well as troubleshooting and problem solving). Human – can work with and work through other people, both individually and as a group (motivate, communicate, coordinate, lead, resolve conflict). Conceptual – can think strategically and see one's team as part of a bigger system (a company, an industry, a community, a society). Failed management is overwhelmingly attributed to lack of human skills, e.g., poor communication with employees and/or customers and lack of relationship building with the team.

181. There are many types of managers who contribute to planning, organizing, leading, and controlling their organizations in different ways. They work at different levels in the management hierarchy. Describe all of the types of managers in some type of hierarchical order of your own design, noting some vertical as well as horizontal distinctions.

ANSWER: Student answers will vary. A hierarchy of various managers along with a general description will include the top manager (at the apex of an organization, with titles like CEO and president); middle manager (responsible for major divisions or business units and major departments, with titles like division head and department head); project manager (often a middle manager who heads temporary, collaborative work projects); first-line manager (directly responsible for production of goods and services, with titles like supervisor and office manager); and functional manager (responsible for departments that perform a single task e.g., manufacturing and human resources). Line manager and staff manager are examples of horizontal, functional managers; general managers are responsible for several departments that perform different functions in an organization, such as the general manager of a retail store.

Name: _____ Class: _____ Date: _____

182. Small businesses and nonprofit organizations require good management to achieve their goals. But the efforts and activities of each are directed toward a different “bottom line.” Describe a managerial position at a nonprofit where you would like to work, and discuss how the requirements differ from a managerial position in a large, for-profit organization. Incorporate the concepts you have learned about the manager’s role in small businesses and nonprofit organizations.

ANSWER: Student answers will vary. Managers in both arenas must adjust various management functions and roles to fit their unique work environment. Managers in small businesses often act as the face of the company, spokesperson, and entrepreneur who must be innovative and help their company thrive and be competitive. Their efforts and activities are directed toward improving products and services, increasing sales, and earning money for the company. Managers in nonprofit organizations also act as the public face of their nonprofit, the spokesperson who solicits government and donor funding, the leader who builds a community of employees and volunteers who are mission-driven, and the resource allocator. Their efforts and activities are directed toward making an impact on society.

183. Companies often pull new managerial candidates from a pool of outstanding individual performers. Contrast the role of the individual performer with that of the manager. Be sure to include a description of how both roles might use the ABC’s of prioritizing tasks or activities, a classic time management technique.

ANSWER: Student answers will vary. An individual performer is a specialist who thinks in terms of performing specific activities expertly, as well as spending time and energy to perfect his current skill and master new ones. He generally accomplishes tasks through his own efforts, rather than relying on others. A manager must learn to think differently about himself and his personal identity. He must become a generalist who coordinates a range of activities and helps others develop their potential. Rather than accomplishing the task himself, a manager delegates to others, working with and through them. New managers and employees alike often struggle with managing a large workload and can benefit from implementing classic time management techniques. The ABC’s of prioritizing tasks or activities include the following: A—highly important, must be done, serious consequences; B—should be done, minor consequences; C—nice to get done, but optional with no consequences; D—delegate this task to someone else.
