115. Fraud consideration by auditors

John Beasley is interviewing with public audit firms to become an auditor. John does not believe that fraud is a “big deal” in client organizations and argues that most individuals in management of companies are “honest people.” He believes that auditors are becoming too cynical.

Describe your response to John’s attitude and discuss the major types of fraud that occur in companies.

ANSWER: Audit firms have received criticism for failing to discover material frauds. Auditors have a responsibility to plan the audit to consider and detect fraud. This is accomplished partially by the auditor's use of professional skepticism. Professional skepticism is not necessarily being cynical; rather, it is performing an audit with a questioning mind. It means that the auditors will obtain persuasive evidence to corroborate management responses to inquiries and to increase the sufficiency of substantive audit evidence. Professional skepticism is exhibited in the auditor’s assumption that honesty in people is not a given. Auditors must not only go beyond the evidence in front of them, they must have the mindset of the possibility of fraud in all financial statement engagements.
It must also be mentioned that John’s perspective will likely not be acceptable to the audit firm because his attitude toward fraud is not rigorous enough for the profession. John must realize that fraud in organizations usually takes place in one of two areas:
(1) Asset misappropriation, such as the theft and misuse of assets.
(2) Fraudulent financial reporting, such as the overstatement of certain assets and revenues and the understatement of certain liabilities and expenses.

116. Elements of Fraud

Research consistently shows that there are three elements associated with most frauds. List these elements and list at least three indicators that the element may exist for a particular company.

ANSWER: The three elements of fraud, or the fraud triangle, are incentive, opportunity, and rationalization. Following are some examples of indicators that these elements may exist for a company.

Incentives:

- Management compensation schemes
- Pressure to improve earnings or to improve the balance sheet
- Personal financial problems
- Required compliance with debt covenants

Opportunities:

- Ineffective or nonexistent internal controls
- Complex or difficult to understand transactions (including SPEs)
- Ineffective monitoring by management
- Significant related-party transactions
- Company's ability to dictate terms to suppliers or customers
- Management's inconsistency involving subject judgments regarding assets or accounting estimates
- Management's aggressiveness in applying accounting rules

Rationalization:

- This is necessary to save the company
- This is a one-time thing to get us through the current crisis
- Everybody cheats a little on the financial statements
- We will violate our debt covenants unless we find a way to improve the financial statements
- The company doesn't pay me what I'm worth

117. Enron: A Fraud Example

What were the failures that allowed the Enron fraud to occur?

ANSWER:

Weak Management Accountability. Management was virtually not accountable to anyone as long as the company showed dramatic stock increases justified by earnings growth.

Management Accountability. Management was virtually not accountable to anyone as long as the company showed dramatic stock increases justified by earnings growth. Company management had a 'good story,' and anyone who questioned them was viewed as being stupid.

Incompetent Corporate Governance. Although the board appeared to be independent, most of the board members had close ties to management of the company through philanthropic organizations.

Accounting Rules. Accounting became more rule-oriented and complex.

Accountants used obscure pronouncements, such as those dealing with Special Purpose Entities that were designed for leasing transactions, and applied the pronouncements to other entities for which such accounting was never intended.

Enthusiastic Financial Analyst Community. Financial analysts that were riding the bubble of the dot-com economy concluded they did not have tools to appropriately value many of the emerging companies.

Biased Banking and Investment Banking. Many large financial institutions were willing participants in the process because they were rewarded with large underwriting fees for other Enron work.

Lack of an Independent External Auditor. At the time of Enron, the largest five external auditing firms referred to themselves as professional service firms with diverse lines of business. All of the firms had large consulting practices. Arthur Andersen performed internal audit work for Enron, in addition to performing the external audit. The consulting fees of many clients dramatically exceeded the audit fees. Partners were compensated on revenue and profitability. Worse yet, auditors were hired by management who sometimes succeeded in pressuring auditors to acquiesce to aggressive financial reporting preferences.

118. Consideration of fraud in an audit

Auditors are required to actively conduct a financial statement audit with the mindset that fraud may exist. What is the general process that an auditor goes through to assess the risk of fraud and test accordingly?

Chapter 02

ANSWER:

1. Understand the nature of fraud, the motivations to commit fraud, and the manner in which fraud may be perpetrated.
2. Exercise “professional skepticism” throughout the entire fraud risk assessment process.
3. “Brainstorm” and share knowledge with other audit team members.
4. Obtain information useful in identifying and assessing fraud risk.
5. Identify the specific fraud risks, including potential magnitude, and areas likely to be affected by a fraud.
6. Evaluate the quality of the company’s internal controls and potential effectiveness in mitigating the risk of fraud.
7. Respond by adjusting audit procedures to assure that the audit adequately addresses the risk of fraud and provides evidence specifically related to the possibility of fraud.
8. Evaluate findings. If evidence signals that a fraud might exist, determine whether or not forensic or specialist auditors are needed to complete the investigation.
9. Communicate the possibility that fraud exists to management, or to the audit committee or the full board if the fraud is material and/or involves members of management.

119. Auditor’s response to fraud risk factors

The auditor assesses the identified fraud risks after taking into account an evaluation of the client’s programs and controls. How might the auditor respond to the results of the assessment of higher fraud risk?

ANSWER:

The auditor should consider:

- Professional skepticism
 - a) Obtain more reliable evidence
 - b) Obtain additional corroborating evidence.
- Assignment of personnel and supervision--specialists or more experienced personnel
- More careful consideration of management’s selection and application of accounting principles
- Adding an element of unpredictability to auditing procedures

The auditor may change the nature, timing and extent of the audit procedures to be performed by increasing the extent of procedures, making them more persuasive, and moving more of them to the balance sheet date or later.

The response may involve the performance of procedures to further consider the risk

120. Auditor independence under the Sarbanes-Oxley Act

There are a number of requirements under Sarbanes-Oxley Act that seek to protect auditor independence? Discuss four of these requirements.

ANSWER: Sarbanes-Oxley: Auditor Independence

201 Services outside the scope of practice of auditors. There exist a variety of services that registered audit firms may not perform for issuers, such as bookkeeping, systems design, appraisal services, and internal auditing, among others. Tax services may be performed, but only with pre-approval by the audit committee.

202 Preapproval requirements. All audit and non-audit services (with certain exceptions based on size and practicality) must be approved by the audit committee of the issuer.

203 Audit partner rotation. The lead partner and reviewing partner must rotate off the issuer engagement at least every five years.

204 Auditor reports to audit committees. Registered audit firms must report to the audit committee issues concerning:

- Critical accounting policies and practices
- Alternative treatments of financial information within generally accepted accounting principles that have been considered by management, as well as the preferred treatment of the audit firm
- Significant written communications between the audit firm and management

205 Conforming amendments. This section details minor wording changes between the Sarbanes-Oxley Act and the Securities Act of 1934.

206 Conflicts of interest. Registered audit firms may not perform audits for an issuer whose CEO, CFO, controller, chief accounting officer, or other equivalent position was employed by the audit firm during the one-year period preceding the audit. This is known as a "cooling off period."

121. Audit Committee Responsibilities

Describe the responsibilities of audit committees and list at least four responsibilities that the NYSE has mandated for audit committees.

ANSWER: Section 301 of the Sarbanes-Oxley Act outlines the responsibilities of audit committee members for publicly traded companies, stating that audit committees are to be directly responsible for the appointment, compensation, and oversight of the work of registered accounting firms; they must be independent; they must establish “whistleblowing” mechanisms within the company; they must have the authority to engage their own independent counsel; and companies must provide adequate funding for audit committees.

In addition to these broad responsibilities, the NYSE has mandated certain specific responsibilities of audit committees, including:

- Obtaining an annual report by the external auditor that addresses the company’s internal control procedures, any quality control or regulatory problems, and any relationships that might threaten the independence of the external auditor,
- Discussing the company’s financial statements with management and the external auditor,
- Discussing in its meetings the company’s earnings press releases, as well as financial information and earnings guidance provided to analysts,
- Discussing in its meetings policies with respect to risk assessment and risk management,
- Meeting separately with management, internal auditors, and the external auditor on a periodic basis,
- Reviewing with the external auditor any audit problems or difficulties that they have had with management,
- Setting clear hiring policies for employees or former employees of the external auditors, and
- Reporting regularly to the board of directors.

In addition to these responsibilities, in many companies the audit committee also has the authority to hire and fire the head of the internal audit function, set the budget for the internal audit activity, review the internal audit plan, and discuss all significant internal audit results. Other responsibilities might include performing or supervising special investigations, reviewing policies on sensitive payments, and coordinating
