SHORT ANSWER

1. What is cultural appropriation? Provide examples. Do you believe that it is harmful? Why or why not? Your answer should be one paragraph in length.

ANS:

Cultural appropriation occurs when members of one cultural group borrow elements of another's culture, such as when a non-Indian person dons a sari or a non-Japanese person wears a kimono. The reason it is harmful is because sometimes cultural appropriation can reduce an entire way of life to a demeaning stereotype that exacerbates historically unequal power relations. Students might also mention the Halloween controversy at Yale where students were sent an email asking them to consider the following questions: (1) For a funny costume, is the humor based on "making fun" of real people, human traits, or cultures? (2) For a historical costume, does it further historical inaccuracies or misinformation? (3) For a cultural costume, does it reduce cultural differences to stereotypes or jokes? (4) For a religious costume, does it mock or belittle someone's deeply held faith tradition?

DIF: Difficult REF: What is Culture? (I) MSC: Evaluating

2. In a short paragraph, please define culture and give one example of how it affects your daily life.

ANS:

Culture refers to the values, norms, and material goods characteristic of a given group. Students might write about the guiding norms and values of a given society. They might write about material culture in the form of art, clothing, food, and the like. They might refer to culture as a sort of tool kit or design for living that can be juxtaposed to instinct. The best responses will combine all of these functions and highlight that culture gives us symbolic representations to communicate, to guide us in our lives, and to express both similarities (with other people and groups) and differences in terms of how we live our lives and how we think about ourselves and our relationships with each other and the world around us.

DIF: Easy REF: What is Culture? (I) MSC: Understanding

3. In a couple of sentences, please describe the difference between values and norms. What are some examples of each?

ANS:

The textbook answers this directly. Students should highlight that values are abstract ideals that are widely held by people in a given social grouping. Norms, on the other hand, are the agreed-upon dos and don'ts of behavior in such groupings. Examples of values, then, might include such abstract principles as monogamy, industriousness, a strong work ethic, an aversion to violence, and so on. Norms would focus on specific behaviors. For example, people should not cheat on their spouses, lie on their tax returns, punch someone for no reason, and so on. It should be noted that, depending on the cultural context, these values and norms might be reversed.

DIF: Easy REF: Values and Norms (I.A.i) MSC: Analyzing

4. How does instinct differ from culture, and why is the distinction important to sociologists? Please answer in three to five sentences.

ANS:

Instinct is genetic and is a fixed pattern that all normal members of a given species exhibit. Culture, however, is learned and typically differs widely between human communities. The distinction is important to sociologists for two main reasons: (1) studying what might be instinct gives sociologists—particularly those interested in sociobiology—an idea of what might be human nature; (2) sociologists use it to construct debates referred to as nature vs. nurture in attempts at mapping the social from the biological.

DIF: Moderate REF: How Nature and Nurture Interact (II.C)

MSC: Evaluating

5. In three to five sentences, please define subcultures and explain why they are important for sociological studies. Please include at least one or two examples of subcultures in your answer.

ANS:

Students might mention that smaller societies tend to be culturally uniform, whereas larger societies, particularly industrial societies, are composites of many cultures. Subcultures, then, are those composites that are different from what a given society's mainstream culture is. Sociologists believe that subcultures are important for study because they are a constituent part of our larger societies. Further, studies of subcultures can show us where social antagonisms might arise (the textbook mentions, for example, colonization and immigration). Similarly, studies of subcultures allow us to investigate processes such as assimilation or resistance strategies that some subcultures might deploy.

DIF: Moderate REF: Subcultures (II.D.i) MSC: Evaluating

6. In a couple of sentences, please explain the concept of multiculturalism and why it matters for sociology as a study of social groups.

ANS:

The text defines multiculturalism as the viewpoint according to which ethnic groups can exist separately and share equally in economic and political life. The textbook does not offer a lot of information on why it is important, but students should be able to think about this sociologically in their responses. Sociologically, multiculturalism is often used as a way of intervening in research that is ethnocentric or as a tool for self-reflection to make sure one does not allow ethnocentric views to cloud one's analysis.

DIF: Difficult REF: Subcultures (II.D.i) MSC: Evaluating

7. In a couple of sentences, please explain the concept of cultural relativism and some possible benefits and pitfalls of it.

ANS:

The book defines cultural relativism as judging a culture's practices by its own standards. Student responses to benefits and pitfalls will likely center on two main themes. First, the main benefit of cultural relativism is the ability to avoid bias in analysis—particularly bias that comes from a person in a position of privilege. The book uses the example of clitoridectomies to show how cultural frames of genital mutilation are used to analyze and talk about the practice and often refer to it as barbaric, backward, and the like. This example also shows a possible pitfall to cultural relativism—that is, critics of cultural relativism often argue that it can hide practices that are harmful and are, perhaps, better made visible by outsiders. Students may use similar examples, but the larger frame stands as a tension between avoiding bias and having clear standards for human behavior.

DIF: Difficult REF: Cultural Identity and Ethnocentrism (II.D.ii)

8. In two to three sentences, please define the concept of cultural universals and describe what they can tell us about human societies.

ANS:

Student responses should highlight cultural features of all human societies. The book lists many of them, including language, marriage, religious rituals, and property rights. Responses about what they tell us about human societies will likely differ depending on the answers given, but students should note that because these are cultural universals, they show some of the things that define us as human beings.

9. In a couple of sentences, please compare hunting and gathering societies to civilizations. In your answer, discuss power and wealth differences.

ANS:

Students should note that there was little difference in power and wealth in hunting and gathering societies compared with civilizations. Hunting and gathering societies were usually participatory rather than competitive. Also, there was little difference among members of the society in the number or kinds of material possessions; there were no divisions of rich and poor. Furthermore, hunters and gatherers had little interest in developing material wealth beyond what was necessary for their basic needs. In civilizations, there were pronounced inequalities of wealth and power, and kings or emperors ruled.

10. In a couple of sentences, please answer the following question: Are developing countries merely societies that have lagged behind the more industrialized areas? In your answer, talk about colonialism and the impact of the globalized economy on developing nations.

ANS:

Students should mention the role of colonialism in shaping the relationship between the former colonial powers and the colonized. Developing countries are not merely societies that have lagged behind the more industrialized areas. They have been created largely by contact with Western industrialism, which has undermined the earlier, more traditional systems that were in place.

11. In a short paragraph, please explain the role that globalization has played in the transformation of our world. Has it resulted in the homogenization of the world's diverse cultures, the flourishing of many individual cultures, or both? Give concrete examples, making sure to cite examples from the textbook.

ANS:

Students should mention the role of technology in both homogenizing the world and supporting individual cultures. With respect to supporting local cultures, the Internet enables them to communicate with others who share their cultural identity, even when they are dispersed around the world. For example, dancehall, like reggae, which originated as part of a youth culture in Jamaica's poor neighborhoods, today has spread to the United States, Europe, and anywhere there has been a large Caribbean migration. With respect to supporting homogenization, students might mention the dominance of the English language and Western values on the Internet. Any well-reasoned argument for either position is acceptable.
