158) Define economics. Why is understanding economics important in one's life?

Answer:

Economics is a social science that analyzes the choices made by individuals and organizations in allocating scarce resources. It affects each of us because everyone is involved in producing, distributing, or simply consuming goods and services. In fact, your life is affected by economics every day. Understanding how the activities of one industry affect those of other industries, and how they relate in the overall economic status of a country, is an important part of understanding economics. Businesses and not-for-profit organizations also make economic decisions when they choose how to use human and natural resources; invest in equipment, machinery, and buildings; and form partnerships with other companies.

159) Differentiate between macroeconomics and microeconomics. What types of economic activities might be included in each category?

Answer:

Macroeconomics deals with a country's overall economic issues, whereas microeconomics is concerned with the economic activities of individual consumers, families, and businesses.

Macroeconomics activities might include economic policies of individual nations and the ways in which those individual policies affect the overall world economy. Microeconomics activities might include shopping for groceries, subscribing to a cell phone service, paying college tuition, or filling your car's tank with gas.

160) Differentiate between demand and supply.

Answer:

Demand is the willingness and ability of buyers to purchase goods and services at different prices. Factors that drive demand for a good or service include customer preferences, the number of buyers and their incomes, the prices of substitute goods, the prices of complementary goods, and consumer expectations about the future. Supply is the willingness and ability of businesses to offer products for sale at different prices. Supply is determined by the cost of inputs and technology resources, taxes, and the number of suppliers operating in the market.

162) Do changes in household income affect demand? Explain.

Answer:

Changes in household income can change demand. As consumers have more money to spend, firms can sell more products at every price. This means the demand curve has shifted to the right. When income shrinks, nearly everyone suffers, and the demand curve shifts to the left.

163) List the four factors of production and provide an example of each factor.

Answer:

The four factors of production are natural resources, human resources, capital, and entrepreneurship. Natural resources include land, building sites, forests, and mineral deposits. Capital refers to resources such as technology, tools, information, physical facilities, and financial capabilities. Human resources include the physical labor and intellectual inputs contributed by employees. Entrepreneurship is the willingness to take risks to create and operate a business. Factors of production play a central role in determining the overall supply of goods and services.

164) Describe how worker incentives vary in each of the four economic systems.

Answer:

In a capitalist system, considerable incentives exist to motivate people to perform at their highest levels. In communist systems, worker incentives are beginning to emerge. In a socialist economy, incentives are limited in state enterprises but do motivate workers in the private sector.

165) Describe oligopoly.

Answer:

An oligopoly is a market structure in which relatively few sellers compete and high start-up costs form barriers to keep out new competitors. In some oligopolistic industries, such as paper and steel, competitors offer similar products. In others, such as aircraft and automobiles, they sell different models and features. The huge investment required to enter an oligopoly market tends to discourage new competitors. The limited number of sellers also enhances the control these firms exercise over price. Competing products in an oligopoly usually sell for very similar prices because substantial price competition would reduce profits for all firms in the industry. So a price cut by one firm in an oligopoly will typically be met by its competitors. However, prices can vary from one market to another, as from one country to another.

166) Explain monopolistic competition.

Answer:

Monopolistic competition is a market structure, like that for retailing, in which large numbers of buyers and sellers exchange differentiated (heterogeneous) products, so each participant has some control over price. Sellers can differentiate their products from competing offerings on the basis of price, quality, or other features. In an industry that features monopolistic competition, it is relatively easy for a firm to begin or stop selling a good or service. The success of one seller often attracts new competitors to such a market. Individual firms also have some control over how their goods and services are priced.

167) Describe the major differences between socialism and a mixed market economic system.

Test Bank to accompany Boone, Contemporary Business, 19th Edition

Answer:

In a socialist economy, the government owns industries that are considered to be of vital importance. Socialist countries allow limited private ownership of small businesses and industries that are not considered to be as vital. In a mixed market economy, a strong private sector exists. It is much larger than the private sector in a socialist economy. In a mixed economy, some public enterprises operate as well. The rights to profits are stronger in a mixed economy and even public enterprises are expected to produce returns. Worker incentives also are stronger in a mixed economy than they are in a socialist economy.

168) Briefly describe each of the four stages of the business cycle.

Answer:

The four stages of a business cycle are: prosperity, recession, depression, and recovery. In periods of economic prosperity, unemployment remains low, consumer confidence about the future leads to more purchases, and businesses expand—by hiring more employees, investing in new technology, and making similar purchases—to take advantage of new opportunities. A recession is a cyclical economic contraction that lasts for six months or longer where consumers frequently postpone major purchases and shift buying patterns toward basic, functional products carrying low prices. Businesses mirror these changes in the marketplace by slowing production, postponing expansion plans, reducing inventories, and often cutting the size of their workforces. If an economic slowdown continues in a downward spiral during an extended period of time, the economy falls into depression. In the recovery stage, the economy emerges from recession and consumer spending picks up steam. The economy experiences high levels of growth in gross domestic product, employment, output levels, and corporate profits.

169) Explain how the Consumer Price Index helps measure the changes in consumer prices.

Answer:

In the United States, the government tracks changes in price levels with the Consumer Price Index (CPI), which measures the monthly average change in prices of goods and services. The U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics (BLS) calculates the CPI monthly based on prices of a “market basket,” a compilation of the goods and services most commonly purchased by urban consumers. Each month, BLS representatives collect prices in 75 urban areas across the country from about

Test Bank to accompany Boone, Contemporary Business, 19th Edition

5,000 housing units and approximately 22,000 retail establishments—department stores, supermarkets, hospitals, filling stations, and other types of stores and service establishments. They compile the data to create the CPI. Thus, the CPI provides a running measurement of changes in consumer prices.

Answer:

An expansionary monetary policy increases the money supply in an effort to cut the cost of borrowing, which encourages business decision makers to make new investments, in turn stimulating employment and economic growth. By contrast, a restrictive monetary policy reduces the money supply to curb rising prices, overexpansion, and concerns about overly rapid economic growth.

Answer:

Test Bank to accompany Boone, Contemporary Business, 19th Edition

Each year, the president proposes a budget for the federal government, a plan for how it will raise and spend money during the coming year, and presents it to Congress for approval. A typical federal budget proposal undergoes months of deliberation and many modifications before receiving approval. The federal budget includes a number of different spending categories, ranging from defense and Social Security to interest payments on the national debt. The decisions about what to include in the budget have a direct effect on various sectors of the economy. During a recession, the federal government may approve increased spending on interstate highway repairs to improve transportation and increase employment in the construction industry. During prosperity, the government may allocate more money for scientific research toward medical breakthroughs.
