8) Financial accounting information is primarily historical in nature, while management accounting information is future-oriented.

Financial accounting information is general-purpose information designed to serve the needs of a variety of external parties.

Management accounting information is customized to the needs of a particular internal decision-maker.

The timeliness of management accounting information is critical. For financial accounting, information, completeness, and verifiability are more important than timeliness.

Financial accounting information is prepared in accordance with generally accepted accounting principles while the nature and content of management accounting information is dictated by the nature of the decision it is intended to support.

9) Cash flow prospects are the likelihood that an enterprise will be able to provide an investor with (1) a return on the investor's investment and (2) the return of that investment.
