- 48) The laws of the U.S. and England stem from the common law of England. When the 13 colonies were established in America, they adopted the common law of England, but when the U.S. was formed, its law developed separately from the English common law tradition. Today, statutory law dominates the criminal law system of the United States, but common law still influences the criminal law system.

- 49) Under the principle of legality, no one can be punished for an act that was not defined as criminal before the person did the act. If a court declares that an act is criminal, although it was not previously defined as criminal, then the principle of legality is violated.
- 50) The MPC is a comprehensive recodification of the principles of American criminal responsibility based upon previous sources of criminal law such as codes, judicial opinions, and scholarly commentary. It stands as a model for the reform of principles of American criminal responsibility.
- 51) Criminal law is different from other types of law in that criminal law seeks to regulate acts that are contrary to the community interest of the social or governmental unit—federal, state, or local. It involves a violation of public rights and duties, which creates a social harm. Although not every person who suffers a criminal conviction is punished, criminal law provides for the punishment of those who violate the rules. In contrast, other types of law do not provide for punishment.
- 52) In this role, the criminal justice system is the official apparatus for enforcing the criminal law. It consists of law enforcement agencies, prosecution and defense attorneys, courts, and correctional institutions and agencies.
