70) Public companies and publicly accountable enterprises must comply with IFRS.

Private companies have the option of using IFRS, ASPE or disclosed basis of accounting. They may choose to use IFRS instead of ASPE as:

- The company is a subsidiary of a public parent
- The company may intend to issue shares or debt to the public in the future
- The controlling shareholders any intend to sell the company in the near future

Disclosed basis of accounting might be useful when the company is preparing non-GAAP statements for a limited set of users.

Ch01

71) Under IFRS, functional currency is the currency in which most of a company's transactions are conducted. Presentation currency is the currency in which the financial statements are presented. Both currencies do not have to be the same so a company that mostly transact in US dollar can use US dollar as its functional currency. It can use Canadian dollar as its reporting currency if it's more useful to the users. IFRS requires companies to report using their functional currency and specify that they must present using a presentation currency. ASPE does not have either concepts.

72) The term used to for adopting the same accounting practices for financial reporting purposes as for tax reporting is book-tax conformity. Many accountants feel that disclosure of variations between tax and book reporting on the tax return is a "red flag" for Revenue Canada and invites a tax audit. Examples would include the deferral of revenues and the acceleration of expense recognition. Revenue Canada generally takes a dim view of a corporation's recognizing revenue in the income statement while deferring recognition for tax purposes.

Ch01

73) These are the forces that shape a company's financial reporting objectives:

- The facts of the company's operations—for example, the sources of its capital; whether it is a public or private enterprise; the length of its operating cycle; the volatility (and predictability) of its revenues and costs.
- The financial reporting constraints facing the company—for example, whether an audit is required; whether the audit report must have an unqualified opinion; whether there are regulatory or statutory requirements to meet.
- The power of the users—for example, the ability of users such as securities regulators, major lenders, or shareholders to enforce their needs over those of other users or the managers.
- The needs of the financial statement users—for example, cash flow prediction; contract compliance; management performance.
- The motivations or objectives of the preparers (i.e., the managers)—for example, to minimize current taxes payable; to reveal as little about the company as possible; to show a smooth growth in earnings.

It is important to keep these factors in mind because to be useful to the users, the financial statements must convey information that is useful for their decision making purposes. These purposes may vary widely, and information suitable for one purpose might not be suitable for another. The choices of accounting policy, estimates and disclosures are impacted by the financial reporting objective(s) chosen by preparers of the financial statements, who will consider their key users in making that assessment/determination.

Ch01

74) - Assess and predict cash flow - helpful for investor and creditor who are most interested in predicting the ability of the company to earn sufficient income and generate sufficient cash flows in the future to be able to pay the company's obligations and to provide a return to shareholders.

- Income tax deferral - mostly used by private company/owner-manager who have independent sources of information about the company. This objective may be in the interest of bankers and creditors but they must recognize that the reporting earnings under this objective will look poorer even though the cash flow will be better

- Contract compliance - for investor and creditor to assess the company's ability to comply with the requirements of the contracts

- Stewardship - if there is a government or another body who have entrusted the financial statements in the care of management

- Performance evaluation - if management's bonus is dependent on this

- Earnings management - maximize earnings if management's bonus is dependent on it; minimize earnings to detract competitors to enter the business/prevent hostile bid/takeover; big bath when management wants to maximize a loss in one year to maximize earnings in another year

Intermediate Accounting Volume 1 8th Edition by Beechy

Ch01

75) Two examples:

- Management wants to maximize net income for bonus but may want to minimize net income to pay less tax to the CRA
- Management may be incentivized to minimize earnings to discourage takeover bids but owners may want to maximize earnings if they're interested to sell the companies to the highest bidder.

It is important to pay attention to the various users and preparers of the financial statements as their objectives may be desirable on its own but they will conflict. The choice of financial reporting objectives will have implication on the accounting policy chosen. It will also impact estimates/disclosures, for which there is a need to exercise judgement. Therefore, it is very important to pay attention to the conflict to make sure that the financial statements are presented fairly.

76) Creditors and analysts often use the reported cash flow from operations to calculate cash flow per share. They compare the operating cash flow per share with the earnings per share and conclude that if there is a higher degree of correspondence between the two measures, the company has high quality earnings. If there is a wide disparity between the two, then the company is said to have low quality earnings.

- 77) a) maximum debt: equity ratio
b) a maximum percentage of dividend pay-out
c) a minimum times-interest-earned ratio
d) a minimum level of shareholders' equity

78) a) to avoid public embarrassment by reducing a high level of reported earnings.
b) to avoid attracting competitors into a very lucrative business.
c) to discourage hostile take-over bids.
d) to avoid the scrutiny of regulators or politicians; or
e) to discourage large wage claims (or to justify initiatives for wage reductions and cutbacks).

79) Most GAAP-based policies recognize revenues as they are earned. In general, CRA takes the view that revenues are to be taxed when they are collected, while expenses are deductible for tax purposes when paid. Essentially, CRA works on the "cash basis" while most GAAP policies are "accrual" based.

80) Students' answers are sure to vary here, and for this reason this would be a good question for class-discussion purposes. While many responses may be valid, it can be argued that oil companies would be under enormous pressure to disclose as much information about their activities as possible. Rightly or wrongly, oil companies are often thought to be exploiting the environment for their own benefit. Moreover, many consumers still believe that they are being "gouged" by these companies. As a result, companies in the oil sector are not viewed favourably by many people. As a result of these negative perceptions, these companies would feel pressured to provide expanded disclosures in their annual reports, to show that they are good corporate citizens.

Ch01

81) Adoption refers to the acceptance of a new set of accounting standards, as is, without modification or an intervening approvals process. Canada took this approach when adopted IFRS in 2011. The IFRS standards effectively became Part I of the CICA Handbook. Adaption is similar to adoption with one exception. While a new set of standards may be adopted, certain standards may be changed or modified (adapted) to suit the specific environment of the nation that is endorsing these standards. Convergence is the process whereby a nation modifies its own standards to be consistent with an international standard. While the U.S did not "officially" adopt IFRS, many U.S. GAAP standards are now the same as (converged with) their IFRS counterparts.

82) Income smoothing is performed:

- a. To reduce a company's perceived risk due to earnings volatility.
- b. To try to show a smooth upward trend in earnings.

Income smoothing may be accomplished by accruing or deferring revenues and expenses (recognizing revenues and systematically over time). Income smoothing may also be accomplished by adjusting estimates upwards or downwards within an acceptable range.
