SECTION BREAK. Answer all the part questions.

299) Eli Moneybags works for Second Commercial Bank, one of the largest banks in the Southwestern U.S. He is a loan officer, specializing in mortgages. Tio Jaime, Eli's favorite (and wealthiest) uncle, passed away last month and left him a sizable amount of money. Eli is looking at the best way to invest his newly acquired wealth. He is considering many options, ranging from simply putting the money into a savings account to the possibility of starting his own business. Although his bank job pays well and offers pleasant working conditions, Eli is frustrated because he has little freedom or flexibility to deal with customers since every decision he makes must be approved by his supervisor. He is also a bit bored and looking for a new challenge. He thinks he might get a lot of satisfaction from owning his own business. Eli has not made a definite decision yet, but has talked to a lot of people searching for a good idea for a new business. If he can come up with an idea he likes, he might just quit his current job and use his inheritance to go into business for himself!

Question Details

299.1) As he starts his research, Eli notices that some opportunities appear to be riskier than others. When considering various opportunities, Eli should keep in mind that 299.1) _____

- A) he will be better off picking a low-risk business opportunity since the safest ones are usually the most profitable as well.
- B) even though some opportunities appear riskier than others, the level of risk actually varies little from one opportunity to another.
- C) high-risk business opportunities often have the potential for high returns as well.
- D) government regulations are in place to protect investors and entrepreneurs from failure, so there is no need to worry about risk.

Understanding Business 13th Edition by Nickels CH01

Amazon is the only one of the organizations listed which seeks to earn a profit. All the others are nonprofit organizations.

170) D

Those companies with high risk also often possess the potential for high profits. Entrepreneurs must weigh risk and profit and find the right balance.

171) A

Companies including Honda and Hyundai have set up design and production facilities in the United States. Insourcing creates many new jobs, and helps offset the number of jobs being outsourced. Because insourcing creates jobs, it actually helps the U.S. economy.

172) B

Although schools, charities, and government agencies often provide goods and services, they do not seek a profit. Therefore, they are nonprofit organizations rather than businesses.

173) A

A business is an activity that seeks to profit by providing goods and services to others. Nonprofit organizations, such as charities and government agencies, also provide goods and services to satisfy the needs of people within a society, but they do not seek a profit.

174) C

The standard of living of a country refers to the amount of goods and services people can buy with the money they have.

175) C

Stakeholders are all the people affected by a business. Today's firms attempt to meet the needs of all stakeholders.

Businesses are part of an economic system that helps create a higher standard of living and quality of life for everyone.

177) A

Profits are found by subtracting costs and expenses from revenues, so Jensen Consulting profits are $34 million - $10 million = $24 million.

178) B

An entrepreneur is a person who assumes the risk of starting a business.

179) C

Investing in a savings account at a bank entails very little risk but earns a relatively small return. Business opportunities that offer the potential for high profits are often associated with a high level of risk. An investor must weigh the potential profit of an investment with its risk.

180) C

The standard of living refers to how much people can buy with their income. Since prices have gone up faster than her income, Maya's standard of living has declined. However, quality of life refers to a broader measure of general well-being. The improved quality of the environment, safer streets, increased leisure time, and improved medical care would all contribute to an improvement in general well-being, and hence would increase the quality of life.

181) B

In order to stay competitive, entrepreneurs must find a market niche—something the market needs.

Entrepreneurs and small business owners do not receive the employer-paid benefits that a large firm can offer, including such things as paid vacations and health insurance benefits. They give up these opportunities for the freedom to work for themselves and keep the profits that their businesses realize.

190) A

One of the benefits of owning your own business is the freedom to keep the profits after taxes. Another is the enjoyment of being your own boss.

191) C

According to the late Peter Drucker, knowledge is and will be the most important factor of production in our economy.

192) C

The factors of production known as knowledge and entrepreneurship contribute toward a nation's opportunity to innovate and create new products and services. Entrepreneurs use their knowledge to grow their businesses and increase wealth.

193) B

Understanding Business 13th Edition by Nickels CH01

The foundation for social progress is having the right business environment. When businesses create wealth and jobs, they are able to contribute to the social progress in the area where they operate. The result is usually good schools and other social services, such as police protection and good health environment.

194) D

There are five major categories of factors of production: land, labor, capital, entrepreneurship, and knowledge. Poor nations often have plenty of labor and land, but lack entrepreneurship and knowledge resources. Thus, the only accurate statement is that knowledge and entrepreneurship are the most important factors of production for the creation of wealth.

195) D

As a factor of production, capital includes tools, machinery, equipment, such as the trucks, hand carts, and forklift machines mentioned in this question.

196) C

The factors of production that seem to contribute most to the generation of wealth are entrepreneurship and knowledge. Thus, one key to promoting wealth creation is to foster entrepreneurship.

197) C

The business environment consists of surrounding factors that either help or hinder the development of businesses. Success in business depends on consistently adapting to changes in the market.

198) C

Entrepreneurship is one of two factors of production that management theorists believe to be most important for wealth creation. The other is knowledge.

The government can establish a currency that is tradable in world markets so that businesspeople can buy and sell goods and services anywhere in the world using that currency.

205) A

Minimizing taxes and fewer government regulations are favorable policies toward the creation of businesses.

206) A

Governments should help to minimize corruption in business for several reasons. It's hard to do business in many poor countries because the governments ignore corruption among businesses and the governments are also corrupt. It's very difficult in such countries to get permission to build a factory or open a store without a government permit, which is obtained largely through bribery of public officials. Among businesses themselves, leaders can threaten competitors and minimize competition.

207) C

One of the things governments can do to encourage entrepreneurship is keep business regulations to a minimum. Regulations may be desirable in other respects, but they tend to discourage entrepreneurship by making the formation and management of businesses more difficult and expensive.

Netflix embraced new opportunities in technology and saw opportunities in the social environment. With single- and dual-income families pressed for time, customers are seeking added conveniences. Netflix differentiates its product, positioning itself as friendlier and cheaper. Blockbuster was slow to react to competitive pressures. Although customers also enjoyed the cheaper prices, the technological environment made it cheaper for Netflix to keep costs down and pass along savings to the customer. The economic downturn had little effect on this situation; and the firms operated within the legal limits of the law.

Without enforceable contracts between firms, small and large businesses cannot efficiently conduct business. The government can lessen the risks of entrepreneurship by passing laws that enable people to write good business contracts that are enforceable in court.

Empowering employees leads to developing entirely new organization structures to meet the changing needs of customers and employees. It may take years to restructure an organization so that managers are willing to give up some of their authority and employees are willing to assume more responsibility.

Companies now have to offer both high-quality products and outstanding service at competitive prices (value).

243) A

Competition among businesses has never been greater. The nature of the competitive environment has encouraged businesses to offer high-quality products and outstanding service. The goal is to be customer-driven.

244) D

Empowerment means giving frontline workers more freedom to respond quickly to customer requests.

245) B

Businesses must be customer-driven. While consumers demand high quality, they also have come to expect reasonable prices and exceptional service. In today's highly competitive business environment, providing a quality product is no longer enough. Consumers and industrial buyers now expect more.

246) B

Empowerment means permitting employees to make decisions in the process of doing their job.

261) C

The service industry is greatly impacted by immigration. As the immigrant population increases, more social services are needed, particularly health services and education services.

262) B

A particular situation that will be negatively impacting the social environment is the number of aging Americans and the drain on the Social Security system. Today's workers pay for today's retirees. When the system was enacted in 1940, there were 42 workers for each retiree. Today the ratio has become much smaller. With baby boomers retiring, the ratio is projected to drop to 2.2 workers for every retiree by 2036.

263) B

The increasing rate and number of retiring workers have impacted the U.S. Social Security system put in place by President Franklin D. Roosevelt in the 1940s. It is currently a hot topic affecting the social environment of businesses by how much of their earnings current employees will need to contribute or whether current employees should have to contribute to this system. Younger employees are concerned that the Social Security fund will run out of money by the time they are ready to retire.

264) D

Modern companies will need to be versatile in order to appeal to young consumers. For instance, social networks like Instagram and YouTube have grown so big that tech developers have largely stopped trying to create new apps to compete with them. Instead, many of today's social media start-ups focus on creating tools that can then be used on major platforms.

All these companies provide an intangible product. Thus, they are included in the service sector.

289) C

While layoffs in manufacturing seem to imply that American firms are becoming less competitive, the opposite is actually the case. The layoffs are the result of tremendous improvements in productivity in recent years, which have enabled U.S. manufacturing firms to produce more goods with fewer workers.

290) A

The service sector has grown rapidly over the past two decades. However, the growth rate has slowed in recent years.

291) A

Firms in the goods-producing sector produce tangible products. Of the organizations listed in this question, only Samsung produces a tangible product.

292) B

History shows that technology has allowed business organizations to be more productive and therefore require less labor. This scenario first was observed in agriculture as productivity increases resulted in fewer farm jobs. Technological improvements in manufacturing have also resulted in increased productivity and fewer jobs.

Understanding Business 13th Edition by Nickels CH01

293) One of the best things government can do is help decrease the risk of starting businesses. This strategy will increase entrepreneurship and subsequently increase wealth. The government can do this by keeping taxes and regulations to a minimum. High taxes and burdensome regulations increase the cost of doing business and undermine incentives to work hard and take risks. Laws that encourage entrepreneurship have been enacted all across the United States and the world. Entrepreneurs tend to favor those states and local areas where taxes are lowest and regulations are least restrictive.

Another way for government to actively promote entrepreneurship is to allow private ownership of businesses. This will create profit opportunities for individuals willing to take the risk of starting their own business. Successful new businesses help to create more jobs and income in their communities.

The government can pass laws that enable businesses to write enforceable contracts, thus reducing the risk of operating a business.

The government can establish a currency that is tradable in world markets, making it possible for firms to compete in world markets.

Government can pass and enforce laws that reduce corruption among government officials and businesses. Corrupt practices such as the need to bribe government officials to get contracts approved not only make it more expensive to do business, they also tend to undermine competition by giving the corrupt firms an unfair advantage.

Understanding Business 13th Edition by Nickels CH01

294) Businesses continually search for new technologies that will allow them to be more responsive to customer needs. Things such as bar code technology, scanners for checkout counters and inventory systems, and databases are proving to be valuable tools for most businesses.

Particularly, databases store customer information. They help businesses plan and replenish inventory more expediently, because management can determine exactly what was purchased and how often, and by whom.

The Internet has offered businesses a new way to reach customers, and a way to provide information to customers that helps with buying decisions. Both B2B and B2C buyers and sellers converse online. The B2B market continues to expand as quickly as the B2C market.

Businesses are also responsive to customer privacy. Due to the increase in identity theft, companies sometimes promise to not share or sell customer information to other businesses or entities.

295) Businesses can compete by exceeding customer expectations and empowering employees.

Businesses are becoming more customer-driven. They are putting the wants and needs of customers first, and adjusting their products, policies, and practices to make sure customers are satisfied. Keeping the customer happy means producing a good quality product, providing great service, and keeping prices low.

Businesses also compete by responding to the needs of their employees. In order to be more flexible and more responsive, many businesses have empowered their lower-level employees, allowing them to make decisions and respond to the needs of customers without consulting management. For empowerment to work, managers must do a better job training, supporting, and motivating frontline workers. Managers will have to give up some of their authority and find ways to encourage workers to accept more responsibility.

Understanding Business 13th Edition by Nickels CH01

296) Demography is the statistical study of populations to learn about their size, density, and characteristics. The United States is experiencing several demographic trends that will have important impacts on how and where we live, what we buy, and how we spend our time:

Respecting Diversity. Diversity has come to mean much more than recruiting and keeping minority and female employees. Many more groups are now included in diversity efforts, including seniors, people with disabilities, people with different sexual orientations, atheists, religious, extroverts, introverts, married people, and singles. Companies have responded to this diverse customer base by hiring a more diverse workforce to serve them. Businesses will need to be sensitive to these cultural changes and find ways to optimize the contributions of people from different ethnic and cultural backgrounds. If handled correctly, this diversity can be a source of strength for American businesses.

Aging Population. There will be a large increase in the number of older Americans that will occur over the next few decades. This is the result of the aging baby-boom generation. As America ages, the markets for products that appeal to elderly consumers will grow. Thus, there should be a boom in the demand for medicine, retirement homes, home health care, and a variety of recreational goods. Retired people will also be draining the economy of wealth. Paying Social Security to senior citizens in the future will draw huge amounts of money from the economy. In the past, the government estimated that there were 42 workers for each retiree. Now it is projected there will be fewer than two workers for each retiree by 2030. People are living longer and the baby-boom generation is retiring.

Single-Parent Families. Another trend has been the rapid growth in the number of single-parent households. Single parents have encouraged businesses to offer programs such as flexible work schedules and family leave that will allow the parent to remain home with sick children.

Understanding Business 13th Edition by Nickels CH01

Rise of Gen Z: Generation Z (those born after the mid-1990s) will soon be the largest group of consumers in the world, accounting for as much as $143 billion in spending power in the United States alone. Companies must find ways to engage this group and design products and services to meet their needs. Social media will play a major role in this group's future purchasing decisions.

297) Greening refers to a movement to save energy and natural resources, to produce products and services that cause less harm to the environment.

Ways that people can contribute toward sustaining what we have include:

- heating or cooling their dwellings less.
- Using reusable bags when shopping.
- Using light bulbs and other home appliances that take less energy.
- Recycling glass, plastics, papers, aluminum, iron, steel, and other recyclable products.
- Buying products such as autos and trucks that are fuel efficient or hybrids.
- Walking and bicycling when possible.
- Using other sources of energy other than fossil fuels to heat and cool buildings.
- Flushing-out and recycling water.
- Purchasing locally grown produce and other foods to avoid added shipping.

Green business opportunities include businesses that haul away hazardous waste; green restaurants that only use green materials and serve locally grown foods; green construction companies that sell and install energy-saving products, including solar panels and green building materials that meet LEED certification (Leadership in Energy and Environmental Design); and organic farms.

Understanding Business 13th Edition by Nickels CH01

298) For most of our nation's history, the agricultural sector led the way. But now, the number of farmers makes up less than 1 percent of today's population. This loss of farm workers was not a sign that farming was a declining industry. Rather, it reflected tremendous improvements in efficiency and productivity. Today American agricultural workers are so productive that more food can be produced with a small fraction of the workers employed a century earlier.

Many of the workers displaced by the rising productivity in agriculture found employment in the manufacturing sector, which expanded rapidly during the early 1900s. However, technological breakthroughs in manufacturing led to higher productivity. Eventually manufacturing firms were able to produce more output with fewer workers, and employment in manufacturing began to fall, just as in farming. Again, this was a sign of strength rather than decline.

Many workers who lost jobs in manufacturing found employment in the service sector. Since the mid-1980s this sector has generated almost all the new job growth in the American economy. This is a very broad sector, and many (but certainly not all) jobs pay quite well. In fact, there are more high-paying jobs in service industries than in manufacturing.

Although the service sector is likely to continue to grow, the rate of growth is likely to slow. The U.S. economy now seems to be leaving the service era and moving into an era that can be characterized as an information-based global revolution that will alter all sectors of the economy: agricultural, industrial, and service.

These trends suggest several lessons to keep in mind. First, declines in employment are often a sign of increased efficiency and improved productivity rather than declining competitiveness. Second, declines in employment in one sector do not necessarily mean the economy as a whole will suffer from higher unemployment or a loss of wealth. Historically, as employment in one sector declines, workers can move into other sectors where employment is growing. This transition can be painful, but it may benefit society as a whole and create more wealth in the long run. Finally, the evolution of the American business sector is not over. Workers today must be aware of the possibility of changes in the job market. The best strategy is to remain flexible, watch trends, and be ready and willing to move to where the jobs are.

The current consensus is that we are in the midst of an information-based revolution, where the global economy will set world quality standards for products and services. Businesses and governments will continue to support technologies that provide the necessary information to make better business decisions.
