13. Gabby Trenton is a pet sitter who receives all of her pet sitting work from superpetsitters.com. In order to work with this site, the company requires pet sitters to be available seven days a week, 24 hours a day, and to wear a uniform when they are pet sitting. The also has a "Pet Sitter Code of Behavior" that dictates how the pet sitters are to act when in their clients' homes. Gabby is permitting to accept or decline potential pet sitting jobs, but only if they have already completed 10 jobs per month.

Which aspects of Gabby's relationship with superpetsitters.com suggest that she might be an employee? Which aspects suggest she is an independent contractor?

ANSWER: The various controls that the company places on Gabby's pet sitting suggest she may be an employee. For example, the rules regarding the hours she must be available suggests the company controls the times during which she works. The uniform and code of behavior suggest that the company controls the manner of her work. The fact that she works on a per-job basis suggests she is an independent contractor, as does her ability to accept or decline pet sitting jobs.

14. If you were advising a new start-up company regarding whether it should hire employees or independent contractors for its workforce, what would you tell them are the advantages of each?

ANSWER: A start-up might consider hiring employees because they tend to be more loyal and stable workers for the company. The company can also exert more control over when employees work and how they perform their work. Companies such as Redfin believe that using employees instead of independent contractors will lead to higher quality work because the employees are more invested in the company and see benefits when the company succeeds. Meanwhile, independent contractors are generally less expensive for the company and provide it with more flexibility regarding when to use them for work. You can more easily hire them on limited or periodic basis and then save money during the periods when you do not need their labor. They are also not entitled to certain protections and benefits provided by various employment laws, such as overtime pay and unemployment benefits.

15. Describe “Nikefication” and “Uberization” and explain one way in which each negatively affects workers.

ANSWER: Nikefication is the phenomenon of companies outsourcing the manufacturing stage in the development of their products. This led to a steep decline in stable manufacturing jobs in the United States. Uberization is the phenomenon of “renting labor for specific jobs rather than hiring for jobs.” Workers are hired as independent contractors under this model, meaning they lose stability in their work opportunities and a variety of protections and benefits that are afforded to employees.

16. Describe at least three ways in which workers who are not covered by the National Labor Relations Act have organized in order to enhance their bargaining power with those who pay them for their work.

ANSWER: Several examples are provided in “Six Groups that are Reinventing Organized Labor.” Taxi drivers in New York have used driver strikes, demonstrations and other public events to improve their ability to negotiate with the commission that regulates taxis in New York. Non-unionized workers have also organized through door-to-door outreach campaigns, such as the one initiated by Working America. The National Domestic Workers Alliance uses grass roots organizing tactics to gather members who work in the domestic services industries. Workers from outside the U.S. with temporary work visas have also used tactics such as strikes and highlighting the importance of their work as part of large-scale corporate enterprises. Some organizations, such as the Restaurant Opportunities Centers United, are also raising money from consumers and even employers to support their efforts to improve working conditions of non-unionized workers.
