Short Answer

36. Explain the notion of social justice and how it motivates people to become social workers.

a. Social workers share the common goal of social justice: the endless effort to protect human rights and provide for everyone's human needs, such as housing, food, education, and health care, particularly for those in greatest need. The goal of social justice is what motivates social workers to be advocates.

39. What was the “Rank and File” movement among social workers? How does it relate to social work today?

a. In the 1930s, progressive social workers organized the “rank and file movement” and began analyzing and criticizing aspects of the New Deal. More specifically, as new social service programs appeared, social workers were hired to administer the programs and service people in need. The social workers themselves realized they suffered as workers; they earned very low wages, faced massive case loads, and lived barely above their own clients. Consequently, large numbers of progressive social workers joined the rank and file movement to build labor unions at relief agencies.

Short Essay

42. Explain in detail the differences between the conservative and liberal political ideologies. Be certain to give particular coverage to how each ideology views the social welfare system. With which side does the social work field typically agree and why?

Ans: Conservatives tend to favor lesser government interference in the free market and a smaller safety net for the poor. Liberalism, which is more strongly associated with social work, favors a free market but with some government controls to avoid people being disadvantaged. Liberalism also sees failure, generally, as a result of complex forces that are not entirely within individuals' control.
