Essay

1. Name one advantage and one disadvantage of the National Crime Victimization Survey?

Ans: Advantages include both reported and unreported crimes, includes variations in crimes, short recall period of 6 months, and two-stage process that allows for more accurate estimates. Disadvantages: memory problems, people can lie, doesn't include "victimless" crimes or murder, crimes against commercial establishments not included, and no one under the age of 12 included.

Cognitive Domain: Analysis

Answer Location: Measuring Victimization

Difficulty Level: Medium

2. What are the three elements of the routine activities theory? Give an example of a situation that could lead to victimization.

Ans: The three elements are motivated offender, suitable target, and capable guardianship. Motivated offender is one who is willing and interested in committing a crime, suitable target is one who appears vulnerable to the offender, and capable guardianship is some type of security measure or protection that would deter an offender from targeting an individual or establishment. An example would be a woman working a night shift job who needs to take the bus home from work and has to walk through a high-crime area to get to her apartment. She may be perceived by motivated offenders to be a vulnerable target if she does not appear to have any protective items on her.

Answer Location: Routine Activities and Lifestyles Theory

Difficulty Level: Medium

3. What is the Gene x Environment interaction?

Ans: The Gene x Environment interactions suggest that some people may have genes that make them vulnerable to criminal behavior (and thus victimization). When the environment in which that person lives, works, spends time, and supports and/or encourages criminal behavior, there may be a higher likelihood that the person will engage in criminal behavior and thus put himself or herself at risk for victimization.

Cognitive Domain: Analysis

Answer Location: Genes and Victimization

Difficulty Level: Medium

4. Explain the principle of homogeneity.

Ans: According to this principle, the more frequently a person comes into contact with persons in demographic groups with likely offenders, the more likely it is the person will be victimized. This frequency may be a function of demographics or lifestyle. For example, males are more likely to be criminal offenders than females. Males, then, are at greater risk for victimization because they are more likely to spend time with other males.

Cognitive Domain: Analysis

Answer Location: Routine Activities and Lifestyles Theory

Difficulty Level: Medium

5. How does exposure to delinquent peers increase victimization?

Ans: Spending time with delinquent peers places people at risk of being victimized because, as lifestyles and routine activities theory suggests, spending time in the presence of motivated offenders increases risk. Another reason having delinquent peers may be related to victimization is that a person may find himself or herself in risky situations (such as being present for a fight) in which being harmed is not unlikely. In this situation, it may not be your friends per se who harm you, but others involved in the fight may attack you, or you may feel the need to come to the aid of your friends. In a specific case of having delinquent peers, being a member of a gang increases a young person's risk of experiencing violence.
