82. Explain the major activities for which an HR manager is typically responsible.

ANSWER:

1. Strategic advice and counsel: HR managers often serve as in-house consultants to supervisors, managers, and executives. Given their knowledge of internal employment information and productivity metrics, as well as their awareness of external trends such as economic and unemployment data and new legal and regulatory issues, HR managers are an invaluable resource for making decisions. In some companies, generally larger ones, chief compliance or ethics officers help employees wade through gray areas when it comes to right and wrong and ensuring personnel comply with the laws and regulations that affect their industries. HR managers are also being relied on more heavily to advise compensation committees.
2. Service: HR managers perform a host of service activities, such as recruiting, selecting, testing, and planning/conducting training programs. Technical expertise in these areas is essential for HR managers as they design and implement talent-management programs.
3. Policy formation and implementation: HR managers generally propose and draft new policies or policy revisions to cover recurring problems or prevent anticipated problems. Ordinarily, these policies are proposed to the senior executives of the organization, who issue them. HR managers also monitor the firm's managers and employees to ensure they follow established HR policies, procedures, and practices. Perhaps more important, they serve as a resource to whom managers can turn for policy interpretation.
4. Employee advocacy: One of the enduring roles of HR managers is to serve as an employee advocate—listening to employees' concerns and representing their needs to managers—to make certain that the interests of employees and the interests of the organization are aligned with one another.

83. Discuss the age distribution of today's workforce.

ANSWER:

Generation Z members were born in the mid-1990s and early 2000s. Today, they make up about one-third of the workforce. These workers have never known life without smartphones and social media, and they expect to be trained and managed with digital tools. They are also more comfortable with racial, cultural, and sexual diversity than other generations and want to change the world for the better. A large number of members of this generation say that they want to start their own business. Others want to go straight to work rather than incurring the cost of college. The millennial generation (Generation Y) is 75 to 80 million people strong, making it the largest generation ever. Millennials are generally regarded as having good technological know-how and initiative, especially when it comes to starting their own business. Like Generation Z, they are also interested in meaningful work that will improve the world around them and want a good work-life balance. Neither generation wants to be pigeonholed into jobs. They want to try new jobs and new tasks, and they are quite willing to job-hop to do so. People in Generation X were born between 1964 and 1979. Generation Xers value job security. The members of Generation X are also independent. They like challenging work rather than repetitive work and dislike supervisors who look over their shoulders. A relatively large number of people, known as the baby-boom generation, were born after World War II (between 1946 and 1964). A significant proportion of baby-boomers have hit retirement age. Not all baby-boomers are retiring, though. Because baby-boomers are staying healthier as they age, many are remaining in the labor force longer. Other factors—including an increase in the official retirement age in the United States from 65 to 67—are also keeping baby-boomers working, including not having saved enough to retire, or their 401(k) retirement accounts have not grown as expected. Older workers tend to be dependable and remain on the job longer than younger workers, who operate more like free agents. Older workers are often willing to work flexible hours. Older Americans—those hitting the 55-and-over age bracket—are the fastest-growing segment of the workforce and will be for decades as the U.S. workforce continues to age. By contrast, the average annual growth rate of 16- to 24-year-olds in the labor force is projected to decline.

85. Describe the role of a line manager.

ANSWER: Line managers are non-HR managers who are responsible for overseeing the work of other employees. Successful organizations combine the experience of line managers with the expertise of HR managers to develop and utilize the talents of employees to their greatest potential. HR programs in particular tend to be more successful if they are “owned” by line managers and HR. When employees see HR as the sole owner of a program, they sometimes interpret it as an administrative or back-office program rather than as a strategic initiative.
